SpringerLink User Survey: Visitors are from all academic user groups, including Professors, Lecturers, Ph.D. Candidates, and Students

Professor / Lecturer

'SpringerLink provides very rapid access to published work which is essential for several aspects of research and teaching.' (Professor, Biomedical Sciences, Ireland)

Ph.D. Candidate

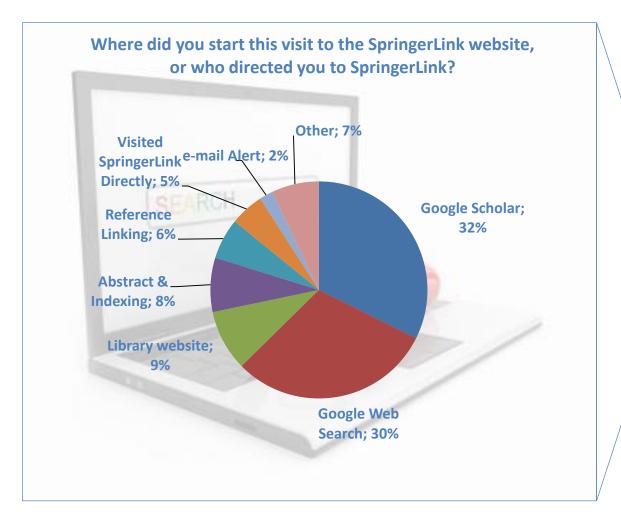

'I often find papers or articles I need on SpringerLink, which I use for my literature reviews to establish the background knowledge for my own projects and research, or just to find interesting articles to stay up-to-date.' (Ph.D. Candidate, Economics, USA)

Student

'The books and scientific articles I find on SpringerLink are useful for my thesis, it's easy to search for it and I've already found a lot of really good information that I can use and cite.' (Graduate Student, Computer Science, UK)

Nature Research and Reviews Journals

Key Facts:

- First 'launched' Nature branded research journal was Nature Genetics, in 1992
- The sister journal, Nature Reviews Genetics, was one of the first review journals to be launched in 2000
- 11,149 journals have an impact factor
 - 19 of the top 50 journals are Nature journals
- Only 179 of the 11,149 journals have an impact factor of > 10
 - 29 of the 179 journals (16%) are Nature journals

How we market these journals

- For all established Nature branded journals
- New Nature branded journals are marketed individually for at least 3 years until established

Nature Reviews Drug Discovery (2002) Nature Reviews Microbiology (2003)

Why have the Nature journals been so successful?

- In-house professional editors who decide which papers to publish (after extensive peer review)
 - There are ~350 peer review editors working full-time on Nature journals
 - High overhead (expensive, but worth it!) price of the journals reflects this
 - Extensive travel (conferences and lab visits) to ensure they are still in touch with their community and aware of new research and development in their field.
- High production values and attention to detail
- Highly selective we filter and publish the best science
- Not an exclusive club we publish the best science, wherever it comes from
- "Front half" accessible news content written for a wide readership
- Editorial independence our opinions cannot be bought
- Reputation for innovation
- Diversification has strengthened, not weakened, the brand
