The Problem with IT books in print

We are currently having problems with ensuring that new books in certain subject areas, especially computer languages/programming are available for the students.

...a patron either hides it (i.e.: behind other books, in a study corral, etc.)

...steals it (this is an increasing problem)

...a small group of students will check a new book out and renew it between themselves such that no one else is able to use the book for 1-2 years, by which time it is outdated

An obvious solution would be to buy multiple copies.

...with budget cuts, the expense of computer books, and the quickness with which the subject becomes outdated, this is not a feasible option for us.

The solution is Safari Tech Books Online

- Joint venture between two of the most prominent and largest IT book publishers in the World

Pearson Technology Group

O'Reilly and Associates

The Safari Difference

- Safari is the first publisher led venture into the e-book market
- “Safari remains the only example in captivity of publishers collaborating effectively on custom publishing” EPS, August 2003
- Safari is subject specific
- With Safari, you buy slots not books
- With Safari, some books are available before they become available in the bookstores
- Safari is the only place you can get new material from O’Reilly and Pearson

Chapter 9. Customer Share Marketing

The Yin and Yang of Marketing

Market share marketing and customer share marketing are complementary actions with the same overall objective: to generate more sales and profits. While market share marketing creates unprecedented reach in helping to identify and drive prospects, customer share marketing creates targeted, one-to-one conversations with those prospects. While market share marketing works to drive sales this year, customer share marketing helps to deepen customer relationships, laying the groundwork for sales a decade from now.

Customer share marketing fulfills the promise of segmentation—building a one-to-one relationship with each customer based on relevance to each customer. Customer share marketing can truly accomplish what 20th century marketers intuitively knew was the next logical step in the evolution of marketing. They were simply unable to deliver on the promise of segmentation using the available 20th century mass marketing tools. All of that changed with the advent of the Web and email.

Table 9.4 demonstrates the extreme yet complementary differences between market share marketing and customer share marketing. Though market share marketing still plays a critical role in reaching the masses most efficiently, its effectiveness has come and gone. On the other hand, customer share marketing's time is just beginning. Market share marketing's primary mission was to build and sell one brand at a time to as many people as possible, most of them unknown and unidentified. Customer share marketing's mission is just the opposite—sell as many relevant brands to each customer, all of them known and identified.

Getting more from Safari

- 36% of 2003 renewals increased in value

...I strongly suspect that we will be adding points and concurrent users in the very near future (we currently have 628 points with one concurrent user and we will need at least two and probably three users at 800+ points for a more efficient interface).

My record indicate that our next renewal will be 6/30/04, but we would like to upgrade our subscription sooner than that. ...Can we pro-rate the addition and put this on track with our next renewal cycle?
