What's new?

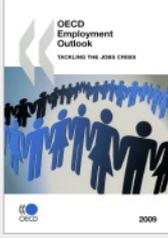

Doing Better for Children

Governments should invest more money on children in the first six years of their lives to reduce social inequality and help all children, especially the most vulnerable, have happier lives, according to the OECD's first-ever report on child well-being in its 30 member countries.

Education at a Glance 2009

Growing advantages for the better educated and likely continuing high levels of unemployment as economies move out of recession will provide more and more young people with strong incentives to stay on in education. Governments need to take account of this in planning education policies, according to the latest edition of the OECD's annual Education at a Glance.

OECD Employment Outlook 2009

This report argues that governments must urgently reassess and adapt their labour market and social policies in order to prevent people from falling into the trap of long-term unemployment.

Did You Know?
OECD countries such as France, Italy, UK and the US have tightened checks on immigration in recent years, in part by requiring certain educational or professional skills before being admitted.

The OECD questions the wisdom of this approach. Long term demand for low skilled workers is expected to continue, especially as countries face drops in both their working-age populations and in the number of people prepared to work in low-status, low-paid sectors.

Around 4 million foreigners settled legally in OECD countries in 2006, 5 % more than in 2005 but down from the growth rates of 18 percent in 2004 and 12 % in 2005. The number of asylum seekers in OECD countries fell to 282.000 in 2006, the lowest level since 1987.

More than three years after its adoption, is the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness living up to its ambitions? This chapter presents some answers to this question. It draws on the most recent evidence available, including the results of the 2008 Survey on Monitoring the Paris Declaration, the international Evaluation of the Implementation of the Paris Declaration and the Progress Report. This chapter shows that there is a robust body of evidence that the Paris Declaration is making progress, but not fast enough. Donors and partner countries need to gear up their efforts if we are to meet international commitments and targets for effective aid by 2010. The Paris Declaration has wide political resonance; its implementation requires high-level political commitment to generate the kind of traction that is still needed to deliver results.

18 times a year

ISSN : 1609-7513 (online)

ISSN : 0376-6438 (print)

DOI : 10.1787/16097513

OECD's periodic reviews of member and non-member economies. Member country reviews are generally done on an 18 month cycle, while non-member reviews are done as agreed with the subject country. A minimum of 18 surveys are done each year. Each issue provides a comprehensive analysis of developments in the subject country, along with individual chapters covering key economic challenges being faced and recommendations for dealing with the challenges.
