Intergenerational Learning and Information Literacy
How media generations learn with, about, and from each other

Digital Natives
(generation born after the 1980s)
- natural-born multitaskers
- mobile media users
- non-linear thinkers
- collaborative learners

Building intergenerational relationships means initiating a process of social learning

Silver Surfers
(adults aged 55+ using the web on a frequent basis)
- used in adapting to changing technologies
- linear thinkers
- individual learners
- stationary pc users

Starting points for cross-generational learning: both using and appreciating the web for socializing and communication purposes

Eye-opener for Digital Natives: learn to see information sharing from another perspective

Enabling Silver Surfers to maintain their existing relationships with social media
